2014-2015
THE Ph.D. PROGRAM

The doctoral degree requires satisfactory completion of the following five requirements:

1) Thirteen courses undertaken in graduate status at Berkeley;
2) Course work in a broad range of fields of English and American literature;
3) Demonstration of competence in two foreign languages, or advanced knowledge of one, relevant to the student's research interests;
4) An oral qualifying examination;
5) A prospectus and dissertation.

The normative time to complete the doctoral program is six years.

REQUIREMENT 1: COURSES

The general goal of the first two years of the program is to assure that the student has a broad and varied knowledge of the fields of British and American literature in their historical dimensions, and also is familiar with a wide range of literary forms, critical approaches, and scholarly methods. A coherent demonstration of this knowledge is the aim of the course requirement, the breadth requirement, and the system of regular advising and evaluation of student work. At the end of the two-year period, the student's record is reviewed in its entirety in order to ascertain whether he or she is able and ready to proceed to the qualifying examination and the more specialized phase of Ph.D. study.

Students will complete twelve graduate-level courses, and remove all incomplete grades, before taking the qualifying examination. (A required thirteenth course in reading and composition pedagogy may be taken later.) If a student has not previously completed a college course in Shakespeare, such a course (graduate or upper-division) must be taken at Berkeley. If the Shakespeare course has been taken prior to enrollment at Berkeley, credit for this course counts as one of a maximum of three classes for which a student can get graduate level course credit (see page 3) The distribution of the 12 courses is as follows:

1) English 200, "Problems in the Study of Literature"
2) Medieval through Sixteenth Century
3) Seventeenth through Eighteenth Century
4) Nineteenth Century
5) Twentieth Century
6) A course organized in terms other than chronological coverage (special problems, theory, minority discourse, etc)
7-12) Elective courses
*) Shakespeare

At least seven must be from English Department offerings, however students strongly are encouraged to take courses offered in other departments in part as a way to work with outside faculty members who may later serve on the qualifying exam and dissertation committees. One course must be an English 250 seminar, requiring a substantial piece of writing. Four courses (#s 2-5 above) will be devoted to fulfilling the breadth requirement (see page 3).
Upper-division or graduate courses in a foreign language may count toward the twelve-course requirement, whether or not they are also used to fulfill the language requirement.

Up to two independent studies, English 298 courses, may count toward the 12-course requirement, with the approval of the Graduate Chair. English 298’s should meet a minimum of one hour per week; instructors should provide a course description and a sequence of readings at the beginning of the semester, and should assign at least twenty pages of student writing over the course of the semester. With the consent of the instructor, students may also enroll in English 298s in conjunction with undergraduate upper-division lecture courses (100-series courses) and when employed as Readers for undergraduate courses (see page 13). Reading and writing assignments should be commensurate with those of standard graduate seminars and, when possible, students should meet with the instructor once a week.

Students who have completed graduate-level course work at other institutions may submit a written petition to the Graduate Chair requesting that specific courses be considered for credit (transferred) toward satisfying course and breadth requirements. The petition should provide a brief description of the course(s) to be considered. In no case will such credit be given for more than three courses (including Shakespeare).

English 200, "Problems in the Study of Literature," is taken by entering students in the fall semester. Students who have done previous graduate work elsewhere may petition for a waiver of English 200 by submitting to the Graduate Chair a letter describing an equivalent course they have successfully completed, reviewing any research projects already done in graduate courses, and enclosing a transcript.

All courses fulfilling the courses requirement, except for the pedagogy course, must be taken for a letter grade. (So must Independent Study courses numbered 298.) Any additional courses in which students enroll may be taken for a grade of Satisfactory/Unsatisfactory, including lower-division language courses taken in preparation for satisfying the language requirement.

In addition to the twelve courses that must be completed before the qualifying examination, each student must take English 375, The Teaching of Composition and Literature." This course must be taken no later than the semester in which the student first serves as a Graduate Student Instructor, typically in the fall semester of the third year. This requirement may be waived, with permission from the Graduate Chair, if the student has acquired significant teaching experience before entering the program.

REQUIREMENT 2: BREADTH

A student must take one course at the graduate level in the Department of English from each of the following four historical groups:

1) Medieval through Sixteenth Century (British);
2) Seventeenth through Eighteenth Century (British and/or American);
3) Nineteenth Century (British, American, and/or Anglophonic);
4) Twentieth Century (British, American, and/or Anglophonic).

The courses satisfying these four groups must include at least one course in American literature, but no more than two such courses. No more than one group is to be satisfied by a course in Anglophonic literature.
No single course may be used to satisfy more than one group. A student may satisfy a group with a course that covers material in more than one group, provided that the main emphasis of his/her work in the course falls on material in the relevant group. In such case or in any case where ambiguity might arise, the student should ask the instructor to indicate which group the student's work has satisfied.

If an Old English course is used in partial satisfaction of the language requirement (page 4), it cannot also count as satisfying the requirement of a course in group 1.

One independent study course, English 298, may be used to fulfill a breadth requirement, contingent on prior approval of the Graduate Chair. No more than two groups may be satisfied by graduate-level courses completed at other institutions (transfer courses).

REQUIREMENT 3: LANGUAGES

For the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in English, the student must demonstrate either:

1) Proficiency in two approved foreign languages; at least one of these must be satisfied by exam; or
2) Advanced knowledge in one approved foreign language.

Before the review of course work at the end of the second year, a student must have been certified as proficient in at least one approved language. The student must complete the entire language requirement before taking the oral qualifying examination.

There are no "canonical languages" in the program. Rather, each new Ph.D. candidate will prepare a brief "Preliminary Rationale for Language Study" indicating the manner in which he or she intends to fulfill the language requirement; this rationale is subject to the Graduate Chair's approval. The student's statement will specify which languages are to count, how they relate to the student's intellectual interests, and on which level (proficiency or advanced) the competence in each language is to be demonstrated. If the student believes that part of the requirement has already been met by recent course work (see below), the rationale should also include that information.

The Graduate Division will accept any natural language with a system of writing if the department certifies that the language has scholarly value in the field; if the language is integral to the training of a particular student; and, if a member of the Berkeley academic senate qualified to administer the examination is available. Each student selects the language(s) used to satisfy this requirement from a set of languages certified by the Graduate Council. Students may substitute an uncertified language only if the Graduate Chair makes such a request and it is approved by the Dean of the Graduate Division.

Proficiency is understood as the ability to translate (with a dictionary) a passage of about 300 words into idiomatic English prose in ninety minutes. Copies of past examinations are available in the Graduate Office. Proficiency examinations are given three times annually, during the third week of instruction in the Fall and Spring semesters and at the end of the Spring semester. (Please note the specific information announced each term on the Graduate Office bulletin board.) A student has the option of not handing in the examination. Examinations passed elsewhere will not be accepted in fulfillment of this requirement.

The language requirement can be met, wholly or in part, through prior or current course work. A student who has successfully completed one upper-division or graduate literature course in a language approved by the Graduate Chair may count that language toward fulfillment of the proficiency requirement. The same credit can be given for successful completion of a course after enrollment at Berkeley. In the case of Old English, however, two upper-division or graduate courses are needed. In the case of Latin or Greek, the proficiency requirement may be satisfied by completing the Summer Workshop with a grade of "B" or better.

Advanced knowledge in an approved language will be granted upon the successful completion of a number of upper-division or graduate courses in the literature of that language, as follows:

1) three such courses taken prior to enrollment at Berkeley;
2) two such courses taken after enrollment at Berkeley; or
3) two such courses taken prior to enrollment at Berkeley plus one such course taken at Berkeley thereafter.

In order to be counted toward either proficiency or advanced credit, a given course (whether current or prior) must be passed with a grade of "B" or better. Prior courses must normally have been taken within four years of enrollment at Berkeley. Courses in which the foreign literature is read in English cannot be counted toward the requirement. If there is any other compelling evidence of linguistic competence, such as a record of published translations, the student may petition the Graduate Chair for credit in this language.

Advising

The Graduate Chair serves as the head graduate adviser for all students in every phase of the program and is available for consultation during regularly scheduled office hours in the Graduate Office and by appointment. The Graduate Chair provides final departmental approval for all programmatic matters, including satisfaction of the course and language requirements, fields for the qualifying exam, and the dissertation prospectus, as well as for various administrative and bureaucratic matters. The Graduate Chair will hold a mandatory meeting with each incoming student during orientation week to review requirements and discuss strategies for fulfilling them over the next two years. One function of this meeting will be to inform students of faculty members who share their academic interests and, in turn, inform faculty members of students being directed their way. In addition, the Graduate Chair will serve as the Second-Year Review adviser for students who have not already chosen an orals adviser. The Student Affairs Officer also serves as an adviser regarding the technical details of the program’s requirements and for administrative and bureaucratic matters.

The Second-Year Review

Graduate Students in their fourth semester will receive from the Graduate Office a ‘Review of Course Work’ form asking them to record completed course work and delineate the satisfaction of the program’s course and language requirements; the form also asks students to identify an orals adviser. Students who have not identified an orals adviser will meet with the Graduate Chair. Along with the ‘Review of Course Work’ form, students also will receive a copy of the ‘Second-Year Review Adviser’s Guide,’ a series of questions aimed at focusing the conversation between a student and his or her adviser. Students should return the completed ‘Review of Course Work’ form to the Student Affairs Officer, who will confirm and record the information and forward it to the students' orals adviser or the Graduate Chair.

After submitting a completed ‘Review of Course Work’ form, the student will arrange a meeting with his or her orals adviser or the Graduate Chair. At this meeting, the adviser will review with the student the completed review form and work with the student to develop a plan for fulfilling any course or language requirement not yet satisfied. With the help of the ‘Second-Year Review Adviser’s Guide,’ the adviser will also discuss with the student his or her academic goals, advising the student on how to refine and meet these goals, and addressing any apparent obstacles to the student’s progress. The adviser may help the student to determine preliminarily historical fields and a specific area of interest for the qualifying exam and dissertation.

At the end of the meeting, the adviser will sign the student’s review form and comment briefly on the outcome of the meeting. The student will return the signed form to the Graduate Office. The Graduate Chair will review and countersign the form, if necessary, confirming the student’s progress toward orals. The Graduate Chair will, in the case of a student who has made only uncertain progress toward fulfillment of the program’s requirements, arrange to meet with the student and his or her review adviser to determine the conditions under which the student might proceed to the Ph.D. oral qualifying examination.

PLEASE NOTE: It is essential that any incomplete grades be removed at the earliest possible date. Incompletes can keep the student from advancing to the qualifying exam and adversely affect the student's chances for fellowships, teaching appointments, and readerships. To remove an incomplete grade, or to make any other changes on official transcripts, a petition must be filed at the Records Division, 128 Sproul Hall.

The M.A. Degree for Students in the Ph.D. Program

The Ph.D. program has no comprehensive M.A. requirement. Doctoral students who wish to take an M.A. because they have decided to leave the Ph.D. program or in transit to the Ph.D. as an additional credential for a specific professional opportunity may do so in one of the following three ways:

1) By writing an M.A. thesis
2) By passing a written M.A. examination

Students who select the thesis option must fulfill the historical breadth requirement and complete at least 20 total units with a minimum overall grade-point average of 3.0. The thesis must be directed and approved by a three-member faculty committee configured as follows: a Chair (English Dept); a second inside reader (English Dept); a reader from outside the English Dept. (this is preferred, but not required and may be replaced by a third English Dept. reader). The thesis must also conform to Graduate Division guidelines, http://www.grad.berkeley.edu/policies/pdf/disguide.pdf.

Students who select the written examination option must fulfill the historical breadth requirement and complete at least 24 total units with a minimum overall grade-point average of 3.0. Students must request to take the exam, by written petition to the Graduate Chair, before the end of the fifth week of the semester. Students select one historical field on which to be examined and may submit a brief written statement describing their specific interest(s) within that field. The Graduate Chair appoints two faculty members who each write two broadly conceived questions, from which the student selects two to answer, for an eight-hour open-book exam. The exam is sent electronically by the graduate office to the student at an agreed upon time and the student must return his or her essays electronically within eight hours. Both faculty members grade the exams, and in cases of disagreement about the outcome, a third faculty member is asked to read the exam.
The M.A. with Emphasis in Creative Writing for Students in the Ph.D. Program

For students interested in writing a creative M.A. thesis the Graduate Program requires enrollment in the Ph.D. program, enrollment in a 243, and a proposal, submitted by the student, to the Creative Writing Committee. The proposal should be between five hundred and a thousand words long; it should describe a field of concern and/or an initial argument for the text. The interested student should also send her likely thesis director a copy of this proposal.

After the proposal is received and approved by all parties, the student and the thesis director will agree on a date for the work’s completion and will meet regularly to examine drafts of the work and discuss the progress of the project. The student must inform the Graduate Student Affairs Officer in writing about the proposed completion date. The Graduate Student Affairs Officer will then communicate the Advancement to Candidacy for Master’s Degree (Plan II) to Graduate Division.

The thesis committee should be composed of a director and a second reader. The Creative Writing Committee suggests that while one member of the thesis committee may be from an academic field, the other should be a colleague whose primary field is writing. The final shape of the thesis is to be decided by the student and the thesis director. The thesis in toto may be, for example, a group of discreet or connected pieces or a sustained single project. Or the director and the student may decide that a critical introduction should be part of thesis. (Such an introduction might be a record of the student’s changing concerns since the proposal, a contextualization of the writing in terms of genre, an inquiry into publication and distribution values, etc.

Questions about procedure should be directed to the chair of the Creative Writing Committee.

REQUIREMENT 4: QUALIFYING EXAMINATION

Students who have fulfilled all course and language requirements may then proceed on to the oral qualifying examination. Students are expected to take the qualifying examination by the end of the third year. This is considered normative time by the department and the Graduate Division.

The Qualifying Examination consists of three parts, or fields, of approximately equal time, which should be about thirty minutes each. Two of these parts must be selected from the historically defined fields, listed below, namely any two contiguous fields from this list, or any single field and a related field chosen from other Anglophone literatures. In most instances, the fields are contiguous if their numbers are consecutive. Contiguity can also be met by crossing national borders; thus, for example, field 4 (Seventeenth Century through Milton) counts as a field contiguous with field 10 (American Seventeenth and Eighteenth centuries). Students with special research interests must petition to the Graduate Chair for approval to declare two noncontiguous fields.
While the English Department does not provide a single orals list for each historical field, because we believe Ph.D. students can benefit from constructing field lists themselves, we understand that the EGA keeps a record of student-generated lists. We recognize that these are valuable study aids and that they are available for students to examine and compare. We also encourage students to consult with faculty about the lists. This process should begin with the orals adviser, but may extend to all members of the faculty, including the field examiners. Historical field lists are advisory rather than contractual and do not rule out the possibility that the conversation may range more broadly. While students may not consult historical field lists during the exam, faculty may use them to inform and focus their exam questions.

The third field, which explores a topic in preparation for the dissertation, is designed by the candidate in consultation with the orals adviser. The third field should be described by a reading list, which may be accompanied by a field statement, of no more than one page, which presents the governing questions or issues that motivate and organize the composition of this list. The third field reading list (and statement) must be approved, and signed, by both the orals adviser and the third-field examiner and submitted to the Graduate Office no less than one month prior to the proposed date of the exam.

One full semester before the student intends to take this examination, he or she should submit for the approval of the Graduate Chair an orals application, signed by the orals adviser, listing the two historical fields and a brief description of a third field. The application form is obtained from the Graduate Office. The student and adviser together are encouraged to propose the names of appropriate examiners; suggestions for the ‘outside examiner’ (see below) are especially welcome. There can be no guarantee, however, that the actual committee will match the proposed list. While students may wish to do ‘mock’ exams with their advisers as practice for the actual qualifying examinations, they should not do ‘mock’ exams with any member of the faculty who is a potential or actual field examiner.

Ph.D. qualifying examination committees will consist of five ladder faculty, at least three of whom must be from the English Department, who will serve in the following capacities:

A. THREE FIELD EXAMINERS: Each of these examiners has the primary responsibility for one of the fields listed by the candidate in his or her description of the fields. A field examiner should expect to conduct a direct examination of approximately thirty minutes on that field.

B. ONE GENERAL EXAMINER: The primary aim of the general examiner is to maintain an overview of the examination and to ensure that the standards of the Graduate Division and the Department have been met.

C. THE CANDIDATE’S ADVISER: The faculty member primarily responsible for guiding the candidate in his or her selection and preparation of fields will also be on the committee. The adviser’s presence should reduce the ambiguities and misunderstandings that can arise between the candidate and the committee as to the nature and content of the fields under examination.

THE CHAIR: One of the examiners, though not the adviser, will chair the examination. The chair must be from the English Department and a member of the Berkeley Division of the Academic Senate. The chair ensures that the examination is well-conducted and thorough as well as fair to the candidate, that there is a judicious coverage of the material in breadth and depth, clear lines of questioning, and a variety of approaches to the material. The chair is also responsible for drafting the report of the examination results. The chair should circulate an initial draft to all exam committee members within seven days of the exam. While the chair may wish to incorporate suggestions from other committee members, ultimate authority over the content of the report remains with the chair (though any committee member has the option of filing a letter supplementing the chair’s report). The final report should be no more than 700 words and filed in the Graduate Office within 14 days of the exam. The chair of a qualifying examination cannot go on to become the candidate’s dissertation director.

THE OUTSIDE EXAMINER: The outside examiner must be a Berkeley Academic Senate member and serves as the Dean’s representative in order to lend the necessary balance and independence needed to ensure that the candidate’s mastery of the subject matter is broad and comprehensive. The outside examiner may serve as a field examiner or as the general examiner but cannot chair the exam. A faculty member whose appointment is split between another department and English cannot serve as the outside examiner.

Advancement to Candidacy for the Ph.D.

When the student has fulfilled the program’s first four requirements, he or she must apply to the Dean of the Graduate Division for advancement to candidacy for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. The application for advancement to candidacy (Plan B) is available in Graduate Services, 318 Sproul, or on the Graduate Division’s web site. A candidacy fee of $90 must accompany this application when it is submitted to the Graduate Division. At this time, students should also inquire in the Graduate Office if they are interested in acquiring the degree of Candidate in Philosophy, for which they are now eligible.

In order to be eligible for GSI or TA appointments in year four, students must submit their application for candidacy no later than June 30 of year three for a spring advancement date. Students who fail to file for advancement within normative time (by the end of the third year) may work as Readers for support and to cover fees, but will remain on the waiting list for all GSI appointments until they file for candidacy.

After advancement is approved, the candidate will undertake 12 units of Independent Study (English 298) for prospectus or dissertation writing. Course control numbers are assigned to dissertation directors and must be obtained each semester in the Graduate Office. English 298 must be taken for a letter grade, not S/U.

REQUIREMENT 5: DISSERTATION

Dissertation Committees

The dissertation committee is normally composed of three faculty members: the Chair, the second reader, and the outside reader. The Chair and the second reader of the dissertation must both be from the English Department. The Graduate Division regards the Chair and second reader as “inside” members of the committee.

The outside committee member must be a member of the academic senate and from another Berkeley department. In keeping with university policy, the outside reader of the dissertation represents the Dean. The outside member cannot serve as chair, co-chair, or as an inside member of the same committee.

For some projects, it may be desirable to add a fourth member to the dissertation committee. There are different options for adding a fourth committee member.

A student can invite an English department faculty member to serve as a third reader. The third reader is warranted when a student’s project requires additional faculty expertise from within the English department. The third reader is thus an additional inside reader. The role played by the third reader should supplement but in no way replace the core advising carried out by the Chair, second reader, and outside member of the committee. If the student chooses to add a third reader, the role of that English faculty member should be clearly understood by the whole committee. It is recommended that the student consult with his or her dissertation Chair about the appropriateness of adding a third reader from within the department. No official approval is required by the Graduate Chair to add an English department faculty member as a third reader.

Committees may be co-chaired, but not by two members of the English department. If a committee is co-chaired by a faculty member within the English department and a faculty member from another Berkeley department, it is still necessary to have a second reader (from inside the English department) and an outside reader (from another Berkeley department). Co-chaired committees are by necessity four member committees, with two members from the English department and two members not from English.

University policy states that, with the Dean’s approval, a non-Berkeley faculty member may be added to the committee as a fourth member. A non-Berkeley faculty member cannot serve as the outside reader. Any request to add a non-Berkeley faculty member to the dissertation committee should come first to the Graduate Chair. If approved, the Graduate Chair will petition Graduate Division on the student’s behalf.

Emeriti are members of the academic senate. They may direct dissertations and serve as readers.

Prospectus for the Dissertation

The prospectus consists of an essay and bibliography setting forth the nature of the research project, its relation to existing scholarship and criticism on the subject, and its anticipated value. The essay is meant to serve as an introductory "working paper" that articulates in 10-15 pages the issues to be addressed in the dissertation, the approach the candidate expects to take, the relation of that approach to recent knowledge and judgment as expressed in published sources, and an indication of how the candidate plans to begin the project. Any prospectus exceeding 15 pages will be returned to its author for condensation. The bibliography, of approximately 5 pages, represents a preliminary survey of the pertinent primary and secondary literature. The prospectus should be developed in consultation with the dissertation director and presented for his or her approval within one or two semesters following the qualifying examination.

Since the prospectus conference is not an examination, the director must not allow the conference to be scheduled until he or she is reasonably satisfied that the prospectus has been carefully written and proofread, that its bibliographic citations are pertinent and up to date, and that the general line of proposed argument is sound. The prospectus conference is not an appropriate setting for negotiating fundamental differences between the candidate and director.
When the student is ready to schedule a prospectus conference, he or she must first submit a copy of the prospectus, approved and signed by the dissertation director, to the Graduate Chair at least two weeks prior to the conference date. Prior to the conference, the student must also obtain from the Graduate Office the prospectus approval form which the dissertation committee members should sign after the conference, giving final approval to proceed with the dissertation; the student should return the signed approval form to the Graduate Office.

At the prospectus conference, the committee members explore with the candidate the issues outlined in the proposal. Normally the conference takes about an hour. Its purpose is to enable the candidate to begin work on the dissertation having benefited from a full and detailed discussion with all concerned faculty present. If it seems appropriate, the Graduate Chair may request further written clarification of the project before giving it final approval. After the conference, the candidate writes a memorandum of the discussion and submits copies to each member of the committee and to the Graduate Chair, whose copy will be placed in the candidate's file. The other three copies will serve the dissertation committee members as a baseline of expectations and will be especially useful in the next year's meeting of the dissertation candidate with his or her committee-- a gathering now mandated by the Graduate Division, which expects an annual report of progress toward completion.

Online Academic Progress Report

All students in candidacy are required to file an annual Academic Progress Report (APR) with Graduate Division. The APR form is available to graduate students and their dissertation chairs through the Graduate Division's web-based system, GLOW. Graduate students complete the form and submit it online; dissertation chairs then review the form, add comments, and release it back to the students for response.

Advanced graduate students must complete their portion of the form each year by June 1. Dissertation chairs will have until July 30 to comment and return the form. Students who do not file APR will not be able to claim their Doctoral Completion Fellowships the following fall. They also may be denied other requests from Graduate Division.

Submission of the Dissertation

The dissertation is the culmination of the student's graduate career and it is expected to be a substantial and original work of scholarship or criticism. Instructions about final deadlines, filing fee eligibility, preparation of the manuscript, approval page, copyrighting, and withholding should be obtained from Graduate Services, 318 Sproul or on-line at http://www.grad.berkeley.edu/current/.

TEACHING APPOINTMENTS

The Graduate Division, in accordance with a contract negotiated with the United Auto Workers, administers all general policies and practices regarding Academic Student Employees (ASEs), including Graduate Student Instructors (GSIs) and Readers. All ASEs are represented by contract with the U.A.W. For more information about general employment policies and practices, including the labor agreement, see the Graduate Division's web site at http://www.grad.berkeley.edu/current/, or go to the office of Graduate Services, 318 Sproul Hall.

To be eligible for academic student employment, as a GSI, GSR (research assistant), or Reader, students must meet the requirements listed by the Graduate Division.
All Academic Student Employees working 25%-time or more are eligible for in-state fee remissions in addition to their pay. For more information regarding fee remissions and current pay rates for ASEs, please see the Graduate Division’s Appointments Guide.

Graduate Student Instructors

The Department of English employs Graduate Student Instructors (GSIs) in two basic capacities: Teaching Assistants, students in the earlier stages of the program who have not yet passed the qualifying exam, typically lead discussion sections in one of the English 45 courses taught by faculty members; Teaching Associates, advanced graduate students, who either teach their own sections of English 1A/B Reading and Composition, or serve as advanced teaching assistants in larger upper-division literature courses.

Teaching Assistants

Upon completion of the second-year review, the Graduate Office will distribute preference forms for appointments to sections of English 45 (preference forms for the following spring semester are distributed in the fall.) TA assignments to particular sections are made by the Graduate Chair, in consultation with the Student Affairs Officer. These appointments are based on academic record, student preference, departmental need, and any prior teaching experience. Typically, all students at this point who are in good standing will receive a teaching appointment.

Sometimes Teaching Assistantships are available to students for one or two semesters in their second year and occasionally for one semester in their first year. In the event that such positions are available, students are invited to apply, first those in their second year and then, if positions are still available, those in their first year. Assignments are made by the Graduate Chair, in consultation with the Student Affairs Officer. Assignments are based on a variety of factors: academic record; relevant coursework, especially at the graduate level; prior teaching; and financial need. Preference is given to students who have not previously received fellowship support.

Summer Teaching Assistantships

Students who have not already taught as associates and who meet the following requirements can apply for summer Teaching Assistantships: at least one semester of experience as a teaching assistant, preferably in English; strong teaching evaluations; good standing and progress in the Ph.D. program. Assignments are made by the Graduate Chair, in consultation with the Student Affairs Officer. Since summer Teaching Assistantships are few and the interest among graduate students is great, the Graduate Chair will keep in mind as one of the factors in making such assignments whether or not the candidate has had a previous summer appointment.

Teaching Associateships

In February, the Graduate Chair distributes applications for Teaching Associateships for the following summer, fall, and spring. Anyone appointed as an associate must have passed the qualifying examination. Students who have not yet taken orals at the time of application may still apply but appointments will be for the semester following the exam and contingent upon passing.

Assignments are made by a committee composed of the Graduate Chair, the Pedagogy Chair, and the Assistant Pedagogy Coordinator. Assignments are made on the basis of the following criteria: academic record, teaching performance, progress toward the Ph.D. degree, and the number of semesters the candidate already has taught as a teaching assistant and associate. Since students are guaranteed at least two years of teaching, the Committee will keep in mind its obligation to fulfill such guarantees when making assignments. For example, a student who has taught for only two semesters as an assistant and is in good standing in the program will be given priority for an Associateship over a student who already has taught for two years.

In order to ensure that candidates who deserve support and need teaching experience get an opportunity for both, the Department follows the general regulation of the Graduate Division, which limits graduate student teaching appointments (Teaching Assistantships and Associateships combined) to four full years (excluding summer appointments). Any portion of a candidate's teaching service that would extend the total duration in both posts beyond the "four-year limit" would place the candidate on the alternate list below applicants who have not yet taught for four full years. For example, someone who has taught for a year as a teaching assistant and two-and-a-half years as an associate would be eligible for another one-semester appointment. However, the candidate's priority for a second-semester appointment would be ranked below that of any candidate still short of the four-year limit who is otherwise qualified. Those applicants with teaching experience over the four-year limit first will be ranked in cohorts by seniority (according to the number of semesters they have taught) and then will be ranked within cohorts (according to academic record, teaching performance, and progress toward the Ph.D. degree).

Based on departmental scheduling needs, and by Graduate Division approval of exceptions to the four-year limit, students may be appointed as instructors for up to six years. Applicants on the alternate list will be offered these positions in ranked order as openings occur. The Graduate Division never approves exceptions beyond six years of teaching experience.

Readerships

Graduate students in English may be employed to read papers and exams in several of the Department's larger undergraduate courses. A Reader is normally responsible for the work of 40 to 60 students throughout the term. The pay formula is based on an hourly rate, covering time spent in class and in holding office hours, plus a fixed quantity of reading time per student. (The number of students per reader x 4) + 80 = # of semester hours per reader → # of semester hours per reader/ # of months of appointment = hours paid per month).

Although readerships provide only a fraction of the student's support budget for a semester, a Reader enrolled in the Ph.D. program may also receive academic credit for his or her work in the following manner. With the consent of the undergraduate course instructor in charge of the readership, the Reader may enroll in 4 units of English 299 (Independent Study), to be directed by that instructor and covering the course topic. In addition to normal readership duties, the Reader will write a substantial paper and will receive a letter grade and written evaluation from the instructor. Only one such "Readership 299" may be used to fulfill part of the Ph.D. course requirement. With the graduate adviser's consent, this course may be included as one of the ten (non-teaching) courses (see Requirement 1, page 1).

CONTINUING STUDENT FELLOWSHIPS

Dean's Normative Time Fellowship (for students who started the Ph.D. program prior to 2010)

Every student who passes the qualifying exam and advances to candidacy for the Ph.D. within normative time, which is by the end of the third year or sixth semester of study, is eligible to receive the Dean's Normative Time Fellowship (DNTF). The DNTF is a two-semester award that provides a $8,000 stipend in each semester plus all fees and tuition. Students must file the application for candidacy in Graduate Division in order to receive this award (please see the section on Advancement to Candidacy in this book,
Students may take this award at any time within normative time, years 4-6, and may even take it in non-consecutive semesters, in the fall of the fourth year and in the fall of the fifth year, for example. Students receive the DNTF Activation Form along with their Certificate of Candidacy from the Graduate Division after they have advanced to candidacy. The DNTF Activation Form must be submitted to the Graduate Division before the beginning of the semester in which the student wants to use the award.

Doctoral Completion Fellowship (for students who started the Ph.D. program after 2010)

The Doctoral Completion Fellowship (DCF) replaces the DNTF for students who entered the program in 2010 and after. The significant difference between the DNTF and the DCF is that students who accept the DCF may claim the award within normative time plus one year, so through the 7th year, but after which no funding can be awarded (fellowships or teaching) other than loans.

To be eligible for the DCF students must:

- Be in good academic standing with a minimum GPA of 3.0.
- Have a current, satisfactory annual progress report on file with Graduate Division.
- Submit an application for Advancement to Doctoral Candidacy to Graduate Degrees by the deadline date specified for DCF in Dates for Completion of Requirements for Higher Degrees for that semester.

Claiming the DCF Award

Students who qualify may accept the award at their discretion any time between their advancement to candidacy and filing their dissertation or the end of the year Normative Time to Degree (NTD) plus one year. Filing of the dissertation is expected to occur before the end of year NTD+1; consequently, no university funding is available after year NTD+1 (except for loans) for students who choose to accept the DCF. The Filing Fee option is available to students at any time they qualify. Note to international students: Doctoral candidates may be eligible for a nonresident tuition waiver for three calendar years after advancement to doctoral candidacy. Beyond that period, non-resident tuition is again owed.

Approved DCF Normative Time Calculation Credits

A maximum of two semesters of withdrawal for medical leave only (documented by formal petition) will not count in calculating normative time. Credit for up to two semesters of parental leave can be granted if

1) the student formally withdraws for that purpose, or
2) the student intends to register to undertake a modified schedule and applies for parental leave status before or at the start of the proposed semester. This request must be endorsed by the student’s Head Graduate Adviser.

Note: Withdrawal for research or other academic purposes does count in accrued time. If no withdrawal form is filed, the interim semesters count in accrued time. Retroactive withdrawals are not permitted for purposes of altering the calculation of Normative Time.

For information regarding other fellowships administered by Graduate Division and for extramural fellowships, see the list on the Graduate Resources page of the English Department’s web site.
Departmental Block Grant

Every fiscal year, the English Department receives funds from the Graduate Division for use in awarding Block Grants. We use this money for both entering and continuing student fellowships. In February, the Graduate Chair invites continuing graduate students to apply for Block Grants. Students at any stage of the program after the first year are eligible. Typically, the majority of Block Grants are given to students beyond the qualifying examination, since their records are more substantial.

In order of importance, the selection criteria for the Block Grant are merit, timely progress toward the Ph.D. degree, and relative lack of previous support. Merit is by far the most important factor in awarding a Block Grant. Previous support is usually used as a tie-breaker; that is, in the case of candidates who have been ranked as equally deserving, preference will often be given to the candidate who has received less support.

"Merit" in the case of Block Grants is determined by a subcommittee of the Continuing Fellowships Committee consisting of the Graduate Chair and two other English Department faculty members. The Department Chair gives special attention to field, gender, age, race, and ideological balance in constituting the Continuing Fellowship Committee. (Block Grants for entering students are awarded by the Graduate Admissions Committee, following similar procedures.)

Each committee member evaluates all of the applications for the continuing Block Grant. These applications consist of the student's statement of purpose and two faculty recommendations that the student has solicited. Committee members also have access to students' Graduate Office files, consisting of Berkeley transcripts, earlier fellowship applications, graduate school applications, and other related materials.

Each committee member reviews every application and assigns a number from 1 (highest evaluation) to 3 (lowest evaluation). These numbers are submitted to the Student Affairs Officer, who constructs a grid showing each faculty member's individual evaluation and the cumulative evaluations of all three Committee members. This grid serves as the starting point for discussion at the meeting at which the Committee decides on a list of awardees and also a ranked waiting list. Thus merit is determined and awards are made on the basis of individual and cumulative evaluations and detailed discussion of individual applications.

The Berkeley Connect Mentoring Program Fellowship

The Berkeley Connect Program has two goals: [1] to provide mentoring to the English Department’s declared majors and to undeclared or transfer students considering an English major and [2] to provide tuition and fellowship support to six graduate student Berkeley Connect Fellows.

The Berkeley Connect Program provides a new model of undergraduate mentoring that is anchored in the academic discipline within which students pursue their degree and directly subject to the influence of the professors in that discipline. It goes beyond, but does not replace, the procedural advising currently invested in the professional staff of the College of Letters and Science and the department’s own Student Services Advisor. These staff members provide important information about graduation and distribution requirements, enrollment and “drop” deadlines, and other matters that allow the student to make timely progress toward the B.A. degree. However, most undergraduates need more than basic advising to map out a successful college career. They need a kind of mentoring, or role-modeling and counsel, which is less measurable than advising in institutional terms. The Berkeley Connect Program involves three faculty members, who work with six graduate Berkeley Connect Fellows. The Berkeley Connect Fellows mentor two small groups of undergraduates each; there are about 20 students per group, and the groups are sorted into three categories: lower-division students, upper division non-transfer students, and transfer students. Each semester, the Berkeley Connect syllabus includes three kinds of activities: small group meetings, which focus on topics of interest to undergraduate English majors (such as "What is the English Major?" and "Keywords for English Majors"); events for larger groups (ranging from visits to important resources at Berkeley [like the Bancroft Library and the Berkeley Art Museum], to a Career Panel to faculty presentations of various kinds [such as "The Book that Made Me a Professor "]); and one-on-one advising on course selection and other issues facing English majors. These activities take place approximately every other week, and on the off weeks the Berkeley Connect Fellows hold office hours for whatever students wish to consult them. Fellows also assist in providing a range of other resources, such as the formation of creative writing workshops, study groups, lists of internships, guides to events, and so on.

Berkeley Connect Fellows spend approximately 8-10 hours per week on meeting with students, attending events, leading discussion, and working with the Berkeley Connect director and faculty members. While discussion of academic work will obviously play a role in being a mentor, mentoring explicitly does not involve help with paper writing, reading drafts or teaching analytical skills. Thus, discussion preparation and paper grading are not part of the duties of a mentor. At the same time, however, being a mentor, like being a GSI, will entail being accessible and responsive by email. Past Berkeley Connect Fellows reported that mentoring takes substantially less time than teaching, which leaves plenty of time for research.

SUMMER SUPPORT FOR LANGUAGE STUDY

Every student who is making satisfactory progress may apply to the Graduate Chair for summer support for language study. The department covers the cost of taking a summer language course at Berkeley. Students may choose to enter a summer language program elsewhere, upon approval of the Graduate Chair. The fees for summer language study at an institution other than Berkeley will be reimbursed to the student upon documentation of the successful completion of the course with a grade of B or above. Travel and living expenses are not reimbursable. Fees for the program are reimbursable only up to the cost of the same or an equivalent course taken here at Berkeley. Receipts for fee payment are necessary for reimbursement. The department can also make a direct payment of fees to the program. Students may receive summer support for language study one time only from the department.

The application for summer support for language study may be found on the department web site and is also available in hard copy from the Graduate Student Affairs Officer.

ENGLISH DEPARTMENT GRADUATE STUDENT PRIZES

The Joel Fineman Prize is awarded annually for the best essay written by a first-year graduate student in the department. Essays may be nominated by faculty members or submitted directly by students to the Graduate Office. Ordinarily the deadline for submission will be June 30. Faculty reviewers will judge the prize, which carries a $250 award.

The Benjamin Kurtz Prize is awarded annually for the best essay submitted in a graduate course. Any paper written by an English graduate student in a graduate course during the academic year is eligible. Essays may be nominated by faculty members or submitted directly by students to the Graduate Office. Ordinarily the deadline for submission will be June 30. Faculty reviewers will judge the prize, which carries a $500 award.
The Benjamin and Barbara Kurtz Dissertation Chapter Prize is awarded annually for an outstanding dissertation chapter and promising work toward the dissertation. Complete chapters may be nominated by faculty members or submitted directly by students to the Graduate Office. Students who already have won the Kurtz Dissertation Chapter Prize are ineligible to apply. The deadline for submission will be in early September. The Awards Committee and Graduate Program Committee will make the award, which carries a $2,000 stipend.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURES

Registration and Enrollment (Tele-BEARS On-line System)

The Tele-BEARS system allows students to enroll in classes on-line (https://telebears.berkeley.edu/telebears/home), well in advance of the next semester. Courses may also be added or dropped using Tele-BEARS during the first three weeks of instruction (the Adjustment Period). After that time, students must contact the Graduate Office to add or drop courses. It is essential that you confirm your course schedule on BearFacts, http://bearfacts.berkeley.edu/.

Graduate Students enroll in 12 units in each semester to qualify for full-time status and be eligible to receive fellowships, financial aid support, or to hold academic student employment (GSI, GSR, Reader). Students who have completed the coursework requirements should enroll in 12 units of either English 602, independent study for orals, or English 298, independent study for dissertation research & writing. Contact the Graduate Office for the TeleBears Course Control Numbers (CCN) for these courses.

Withdrawal

Withdrawals are processed in the Graduate Office, so students wishing to withdraw need to contact the Graduate Student Affairs Officer. Withdrawn students will need to file an application for readmission with Graduate Degrees & Petitions, 318 Sproul, prior to the semester in which they wish to return. Along with the application for readmission, students need to file a paper Statement of Legal Residence. All necessary forms can be found on the website of the Office of the Registrar (current students/forms).

Establishing California Residency

All out-of-state graduate students who are U.S. citizens or permanent residents, including those on fellowship, should begin to establish California residency status before the beginning of their first semester. It takes one year for residency status to be granted for tuition purposes. If you fail to establish residency, you will be required to pay nonresident tuition in your second year regardless of fellowship status. For further information, please consult the web site for Office of the Registrar (http://registrar.berkeley.edu/) or contact the Residence Deputy, 39 Sproul Hall, (510) 642-1614.

Ph.D. Qualifying Exam Procedures

1. Student hands in Department Orals Application at the beginning of the semester before he or she intends to take the exam.
2. GSAO schedules exam date in accordance with the Graduate Chair and the proposed committee members.
3. Student prepares Application for the Ph.D. Qualifying Exam (Form for the Graduate Division). Student collects required DE signatures if applicable and returns form to GSAO at least six weeks before the scheduled exam date.
4. GSAO forwards application along with necessary documentation to the Graduate Division at least three weeks prior to scheduled exam date.
5. Student receives Notice of Admission to the Ph.D. Qualifying Exam in GLOW (gradlink.berkeley.edu).
6. Student takes the Ph.D. Qualifying Exam. The Chair of the student’s Ph.D. Qualifying Exam committee forwards the report form to the GSAO immediately after the exam. GSAO signs the form and forwards it to the Graduate Division.
7. Within two weeks after the exam, the Chair of the student’s Ph.D. Qualifying Exam committee provides a written report to the Graduate Chair. This report is for departmental use only and goes into the student’s file. The student can access the report and obtain copies of it at any time.

Travel Reimbursements

Graduate students may request reimbursement for travel expenses when incurred for the purpose of presenting a paper at a conference. Students may be reimbursed up to $400 once per academic year (as long as departmental funds allow) and must submit receipts after the trip is completed.

The Department will fund graduate students up to $400 to travel to archives critical for dissertation research. To apply, submit a letter to the Graduate Chair specifying which archives you plan to consult and how they will further your research. The dissertation chair should also write a brief letter of support. Upon return, the student must submit an account of the materials s/he found and how the student plans to use them.

The English Department normally pays partial travel expenses for placement candidates who have job interviews at MLA. The amount of reimbursement for eligible candidates will be $400. The reimbursement form must be signed by the Placement Chair. A student can benefit from the MLA Conference Travel Reimbursement more than once during his or her time at the English Department with the approval of the Placement Chair. The MLA conference reimbursement and the yearly conference travel reimbursement are not exclusive.

Graduate students on the job market may also be reimbursed for job placement expenses for up to $45 once this academic year: $20 is specifically earmarked for signing up for the letter service and $25 is for other placement receipts, i.e., photocopying, telephone charges, and special mailing.

Please see the ‘Resources’ page on the Department’s web site, for more instructions regarding reimbursements and the necessary request forms or come into the Graduate Office.

Disabled Student Program

The Disabled Student’s Program (DSP) is committed to ensuring that all students with disabilities have equal access to educational opportunities at UC Berkeley. They offer a wide range of services for students with disabilities while working discretely and professionally with the Department. Please contact the DSP office directly to learn more about what services may be available.

THE ENGLISH GRADUATE ASSOCIATION

The E.G.A. serves the needs of Ph.D. students in the English department at U.C. Berkeley by fostering an intellectual, social, and professional community amongst students and faculty. The E.G.A. is also an information gateway of sorts helping students access resources outside the department as well as bringing outside resources to the department throughout the year with various talks, conferences and workshops.

All English graduate students are automatically members of the E.G.A. The Association has officers but merely for ease of organization, welcoming and expecting input and labor from all grads. The E.G.A. also has representation on various departmental committees as well mini-committees of our own as needs arise. Positions are awarded by election at the end of each academic year for the coming year. English graduate students may join the E.G.A. listserve and stay informed of events throughout the year. For more information, please see the E.G.A. web site at http://english.berkeley.edu/graduate/EGA_directory.
